

A Peculiar Boarder.

A well dressed and handsome lady, with rich golden hair and sapphire eyes, seated herself in the parlor of the Oriental Hotel at Monterey, recently, and called a waiter.

"Who, prithce, is manager now of this brave hostelry?" she inquired of the boy who waited on her.

"Yes, ma'am, he's down dem yere stairs in de office. He's Mr. Romeo Gillis what done de bossin' about yere."

"Bid him then approach," said the lady, "for unto him I fain would speak me of the travail which my poor heart suffers lest I fail of those accommodations in meat or sleep that lie in his advantage now to barter."

The waiter eyed her a moment, and then called Mr. Gillis, who entered the parlor all smiles.

"Good Romeo, for so do I hear thee called; sweet Romeo, as I would call thee to myself, hast rooms?"

"Why, yes," responded Mr. Gillis, somewhat taken aback. "We have a few left; what would you like?"

"Nay, gentle Romeo, speak not so sternly, but rather tell me what thou hast. Perchance I might ask what might be beyond thy gift, or sale, or rent. Coin thy thoughts into words, and from the portals of thy countenance drop the silver currency upon my waiting ears."

"How high would you like to go?" said Mr. Gillis, backing toward the door.

"Thy tongue asketh now conundrums, pure Romeo. Dost mean financially, or dost thou reckon from the sordid earth to where thy roof doth glisten in the noontide sun?"

"Oh! I say," responded Mr. Gillis nervously. "I mean, you know, do you want a parlor or rooms up stairs? Don't want to offend, you know, but just tell me what you'd like, and I'll try to fix it."

"All places are parlors with thee, fair Romeo, and recollections of thee would light up dungeons—"

"Gas in every room, ma'am; hot and cold water. Shall I call the chambermaid, ma'am?"

"Nay, nay. Invoke not cords and nurse. My blazing brain—"

"Want a room with a fire escape?" asked Mr. Gillis, anxiously.

"Might I but find escape from these swift waves that burn my heart. But, Romeo, if anon I take unto myself such rooms as thy bright eyes have illumined, what—?"

"Four dollars, ma'am. Four dollars a day."

"And canst thou not for less appease my hungering heart?"

"That will be extra, ma'am. You can feed a la carte or table d'hôte, as you prefer. I'm only speaking for the room."

"And I—I am speaking of thee, my Romeo. My bankrupt heart—"

"Any baggage, ma'am?"

"Aye, baggage! He thinks me poor in the world, since I have yielded him the wealth I had of spirit."

"Cause transients without baggage must pay in advance," said Mr. Gillis, in a soothing voice.

"And may I see this cave to which thou wouldst consign me, glowing with the hope of life? Wouldst show me, Romeo, the prison now to which I am ordained?"

"The prison! You mean the cells; they're over in the other house. I don't have—"

"Nay, sweet Romeo, not those. I fain would see the chamber whereof you told in those tender tones was—"

"Four dollars? You mean a $4 room?" said Mr. Gillis, brightening up.

"I marked me not the sordid value that thou didst place upon thy proffered retreat. 'Tis food—"

"We haven't any $4 rooms with meals. You can see the room and make up your mind what you want."

"Come cords, come nurse, and I'll to this chamber fair—"

"Certainly," said Mr. Gillis, as he dashed out of the parlor after the housekeeper.

Half an hour later Mr. Gillis entered the bar-room, pale and with fixed features.

"Come hither, gentle bar-keeper," he said. "Fill me high a toaming chalice with the bitters intermingled with the spirit, while the crystal ice shines sparkling and the yellow peel floats idly on the bosom of the nectar, for I fain would fill my system with nepenthe from the sorrow I have felt, and Lethe of that long legged, slab sided, lantern jawed old mixture of a Dominica hen and a Gibraltar jackass, who's been howling poetry to me. The confounded old heifer was the agent of a baby's swing factory, and told the housekeeper she wanted to put four up in the parlor at $40 each. Say, you," he yelled, as the waiter who first called him dashed by, "Say, you imp of sulphur, if you ever let in another red headed woman with a wen under her ear, I'll break your leg off and throw it away. Give me a cocktail before I put this house in need of repairs."

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

A large edition will be printed each day, to be circulated in Honolulu and throughout the Islands, regardless of subscriptions, until a regular paying list of subscribers is obtained on the public becoming acquainted with the merits of the paper.

The DAILY HERALD will furnish a fresh and readable record of events in city and country. It will also give, from time to time as received, a summary of the latest news from the outside world, in concise and systematic form.

The DAILY HERALD will follow a straightforward, consistent, independent and moderate course in the discussion of public affairs. It will not be the servile organ of any clique, faction or party. At the same time an earnest support will be given to measures promotive of the public welfare, and to individuals or organizations that may appear in the political field, with claims to popular confidence backed by worthy records and unassailable principles.

The undersigned would, however, rather point to his record as a journalist in this city for the past two years, as conductor of the Daily Bulletin, than make promises that, in general estimation, are valueless until justified by performance. He can only pledge himself to do his best to produce a thorough, an influential, and in every way acceptable, daily newspaper.

Try the "Daily Herald" for a month at least.
